

PROGRAM CHANGE PROPOSALS

Services to Indian Community (Humboldt)

($97,140
6.5 positions)

This request for funding would provide for a director, an assistant, a clerical position and student interns in the Indian language.

Since its establishment at California State University, Humboldt, in 1966, the Center for Community Development has provided an exceptional method for addressing fundamental community problems, particularly as these problems relate to the north coast Indians, one of the most inaccessible and disadvantaged groups in the university's service area.

The Center has been instrumental in increasing local interest in Indian culture, history and language, especially as they are relevant to elementary and secondary education. This program would provide practical experience to students and faculty in dealing with community problems, and also provide significant services to the Indian community.

The achievements of the Center for Community Development over the past seven years indicate clearly that it has developed the experience and knowledge to provide leadership in relating university resources to the educational, economic, social and cultural needs of the north coast population, with special emphasis on the Indian population.

Education Participation in Community (Long Beach)

($29,398
3.0 positions)

This request would provide a program director and two clerical assistants to coordinate the Educational Participation in Communities Program (EPIC) at CSU, Long Beach. This program is part of the outreach program of the university and would use the surrounding communities as a laboratory for the instruction of students in practical applications of their academic training. The fundamental premise of this program is that education is effective in direct relation to the students real involvement in the subject matter. This involvement permits prospective careers to be tested and explored by the students' actual experience.

It would also have secondary benefits in providing services to the community. These services range from working with the California Youth Authority and ex-offenders to providing volunteer tutors for public schools. Present federal funding through Title I will soon cease. State funding is necessary if the program is to continue present services, expand services as requested by both academic departments and the community, and improve services through more highly developed training and evaluation techniques.

Associated Clinics (Los Angeles)

($114,491
15.5 positions)

This funding request would provide for 3 professional positions, 3 technicians, 3.5 secretarial and several student assistants, to be employed in five clinics.

The Associated Clinics of CSU, Los Angeles, represent six departments in two schools of the university and integrate the disciplines, training facilities, and services of five clinics: Guidance, Hearing, Psychology, Reading, and Speech. The goal of the Associated Clinics is to provide a wide range of clinical and research training experiences which serve the instructional programs of the university and which simultaneously offer children and adults of the community professional integrated services of evaluation and therapy. The campus proposes to have several faculty positions and an appropriate complement of clerical and technical assistance budgeted directly to the Associated Clinics. This is to fulfill a need for a more unified approach to clinical training and services.
